

Before; there were bards. They who made their songs out of messages. Today, we ask the same things of our applications. I am writing to you in response to your job listing on your website. I am applying for position of application engineer. This is, my dream job. Please take the time to review my attached resume for the consideration in hiring me for this position.

- Who is Adam?
- What I found within the rich object-oriented is that I instantly fell in love. Having fallen on the right way and at the right time, I became fully engaged.
- When the strong qualities of team building meet in a scenario with multiple tasks at hand both in my experience in an architectural office as well as working with the PVPA students they blossomed. I started art and culinary after-school program.
- Where my attention to detail is tested the most is at my position on the top of the 7% in visual-spatial of the country.
- Why I see my place as a Knowledge Matters application engineer; is to see my needs for helping others through education, as well as calling upon my other great passion: programming.
- How all of these experiences work together; for example enveloping interface design in education systems such as instructional scaffolding is that my faculties are one lovely structural medley.

In closing I'd like to take this time to thank you, Talent Manager. Much about education and programming is about making one connection. I wish to become as enriching, nurturing, and engaging at this as needed to make my dream come true. Writing educational software as part of a team at KnowledgeMatters will see that need. Contact, me as needed to set up the time to meet.

Sincerely,
Adam Porth
